

Hailing from the farming town of Gelvaan, Hazel (she/her) is an artificing student at Dayal Hall. Born and raised in an agricultural community, her affinity for animals appears in her automaton work. She wears her heart on her sleeve, and is often in awe of the bustling spires of Jrusar.

Hazel is an elven, low-level artificer with a homunculus servant bird automaton. Actors portraying Hazel should be comfortable working with a simple animatronic.

other notes

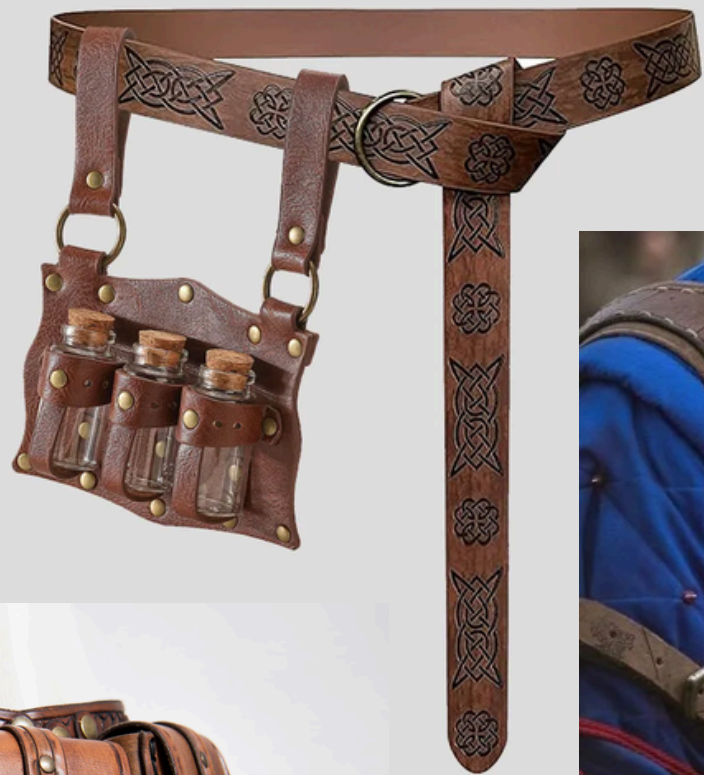

The vibe is a little nebulous. It's not necessarily steampunk, but it's also not your typical fancy high fantasy-something in the middle. Shoot me a message if you have any questions.

I've also purposefully not included facial feature references for Hazel. I'll leave that up to interpretation. I do stand by the fact that Hazel is, probably, ethnically white or white-passing, and presents traditionally female.

The bird automaton animatronic should be relatively small and lightweight. It will be mounted to the actor with a themed shoulder brace. The brace goes over the rest of the costuming.

tool belt/bandoleer. for carrying arcane charges or something-- I don't really know.

accessories

This section is mostly speculative, in the sense that narratively, it doesn't make enough sense as to why a student would be walking around with a bunch of tools and other tinkering supplies. However, I've included these references with the hopes that they might fill out the character profile a little bit. Use however many you feel is necessary or looks good. Feel free to come up with your own as well!

bookbag/messenger bag.
hazel's a student, after all.

Kimberley Wu

artificer goggles. hazel probably uses these for like-- welding or something. the actor would wear these on their head, rather than their face.

Kimberley Wu

I like this shape, but lose the layering on the shoulder; I think it's too much.

Kimberley Wu

shoulder pauldron

stylistically, this is the closest to what i want to see, but lose the armor-type thing sticking out of the shoulder.

Kimberley Wu

i like the color and texture on this one, and the thickness of the strap over the shoulder is great. but the overall shape is too rigid.

Kimberley Wu

This, I think, is auxilliary to the rest of the costume. Hazel probably thrifted this or got it second-hand from a mentor, then modded it for her automaton.

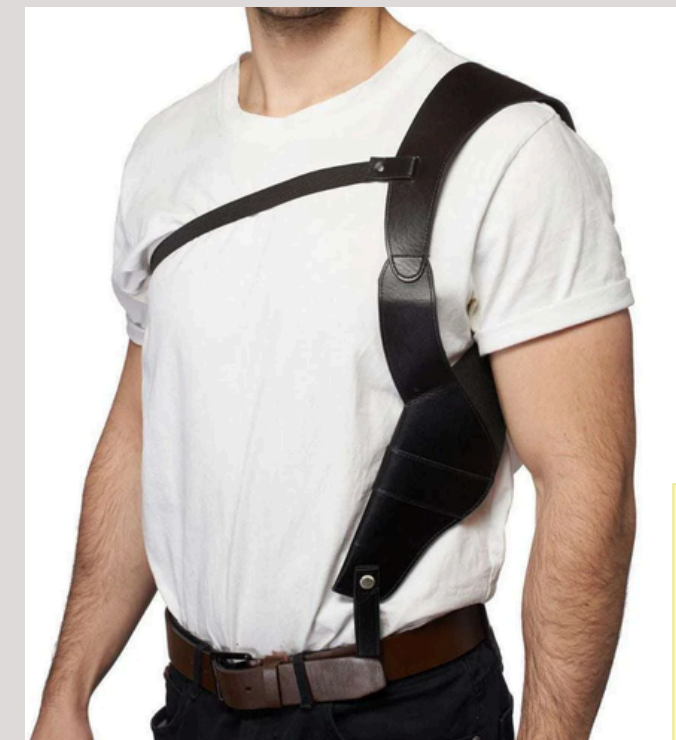

I like that these ones have like--two layers. but color and style are completely wrong.

Kimberley Wu

I like that this one is is two-toned. the overall shape is too round though.

Kimberley Wu

this is actually a holster, which i could also see working (bird needs batteries, etc.). the strap going over the shoulder is a little too thin here though.

bird automaton

Okay so...this is admittedly the part I have the least figured out. Here's what I do know:

- it should very clearly be fashioned after a real bird; a macaw, specifically. No cartoonish features.
- it's a robot. It can be painted to mimic the colors of a real bird, but texture wise, this thing is made of mostly metal. bonus points if we can see the bird's mechanisms.
- it's small/medium-sized. height clocks in around a little under a foot [in real life].

I've got just a butt ton of macaw pictures here. Some of them depict the macaw flying, but the true functionality of the animatronic does not include flying-- it's not in scope.

this is the scarlet macaw. the animatronic is probably always going to assume this position (see circled). i'm also not necessarily trying to go for this color, but i would like at least two tones.

note that macaws have huge chunky beaks. just massive.

university uniforms

I think there’s an opportunity to do something interesting here. It would be really nice if the uniform doesn’t necessarily read as masculine or feminine. School uniforms (colloquially) are rooted in the western aesthetic, but the gentleman who runs the school Hazel attends is South Asian- I’d like to weave that into the costuming here somehow.

I think it should be a Mandarin collar vest over a shirt with balloon sleeves, then a sensible pair of pants. I’m not married to this combination though. Give it a go and see what looks visually pleasing.

Pattern-wise, two real-world examples I’d like to draw from are the kurta and the barong (see below). I’d love if the top had either some sewn filigree around the edges somewhere.

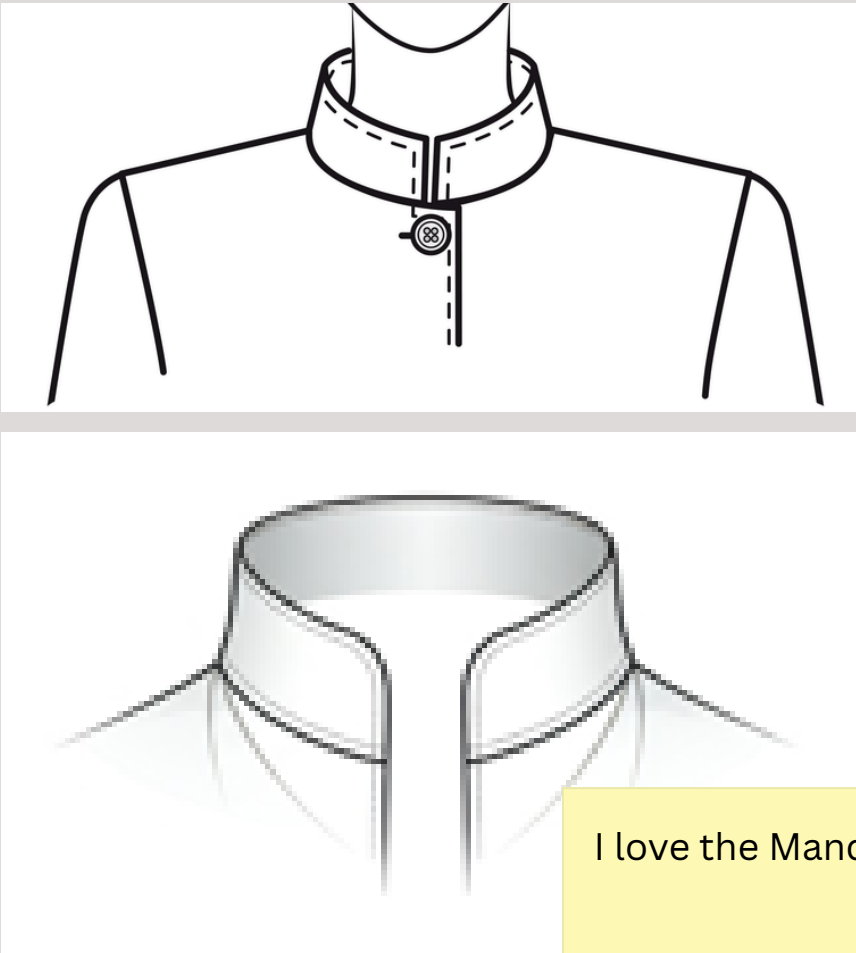

this is a kurta with filigree around the collar. Could be interesting.

Kimberley Wu

this is a barong. the filigree goes vertically down each side of the shirt, which is great too.

Kimberley Wu

I love the Mandarin/Mao collar.

Kimberley Wu

Balloon sleeves are kind of cool. I think they could bring a femininity to the shirt. Not married to this though. Give it a go.

Kimberley Wu

these vests are pretty spot on. I think some kind of staggered lap (the one on the right) could be interesting, but I’m not married to it. See what sticks.

Kimberley Wu

for the pants, my first thought is to just go with a sailor pant. a palazzo pant (less fitted up top and no buttons) might also work, but try this first.

Jrusar is surrounded by a jungle, so I image the materials here will be relatively breathable and light. Try not to use black or white in the costume, but it’s not a hard and fast rule.

I don’t have any ideas on what the color scheme or palette for this might be. My only ask is let’s please avoid anything that insinuates one of the Hogwarts houses.
